

Rcoin - A coin of Respect by namzezam

Rcoin is a time limited and equally re-distributed coin - a cyclic and communal coin in Community Exchange Systems (ces) - rings. Such rings are optionally owned equally as a Common companies (ComCom) for becoming more open in the bottom-up rebuild of people's economy. Use Rcoins to add social justice and resilience to your community and yourself.

The Rcoin is daily and gradually losing its value, which is equally gained by the community members. As such, it is not money, nor an equivalent to money, but still a medium of exchange or credit and an inner community evaluation tool.

Like any thing besides money, Rcoin is going to die and be dispersed - it's a natural medium. Its lifetime is adjustable per each cycle of issuing new coins.

Its lost value, as equivalent to percentage of inflation, is hundred divided by its lifetime. Example: 50 years lifetime is like 2% inflation.

This lost value is only lost for its owner, since the lost is gained as an equal dividend by the community members. Hence, saving in isolation, alone and not communal, now costs more not only to the community but to the owner too.

As a communal tax, the lost value taxes the saving-in-isolation for turning a toxic-competitive environments to become more supportive, wherein community's members are benefited from advancing those who earn more, now also for the benefit of each member in that community.

The Rcoin is an electronic p2p money to automate its features. It's communal next after Bitcoin being the p2p's gold. Its exchange in relation to the others can be direct, also as equal dividend in certain currency, or a substitutable one - through price of goods, services and holdings. Since it is only 1) used in the ring with 2) constant lost value, which is 3) equally redistributed, trading in it makes it harder to provide "predictability" even after passing measures of "negligibility".

Yes, people want immortal property, as they fear death and discriminate for serving their debt in slavery until their death. Yes, people admire leaders doing things they are not legitimated to do. And yes - the community they are in must have growth, while they prepare wars. Wars prepared to erase economies to be restarted again and again. Wars prepared also by exporting weapons, corrupting criminal governments and exploiting others' land.

But what is the medium forcing people to become such? Isn't it money and mutual or speculative trust in immortal, accumulative and inheritable property?

Systems allowing endless accumulation of power can only turn evil before collapsing. The medium makes the system and it's the system, stupid. Let's decentralize it!

For your community and yourself benefit, against gentrification and for blocking fat fingers from taking over you or your cause, use money only to buy things from far by your ring, and Rcoins for buying thing from near in your ring.

ComCom – A Common Company

A Common company (ComCom) is based on unchangeable agreement of ownership between its owners matching the group's criteria and categorized either as peers (equal-owners) or not, where

- each peer may only be a human-person or a ComCom,
 - but a non-peer may be a human-person, ComCom or a non-ComCom body;
- through all holding layers only a single holding position per owner is allowed;
- the group has the first right to buy any ownership over it
 - and once in its creation it can become sealed allowing no more owners over it;
- (d) is a positive number less than one representing the group's decentralization,
 - where all the peers together equally hold (d) times 100 percent of the group;
- (c) is the count of the peers - to be decided independently by them alone;
- (v) is the ownership value of one peer - it worth peer-coin in Rcoin or money and it ranges only proportionally to constant number times peer's ratio in group;
- (m) is the group's market value; and

- (v) reflects (m) , such that (m) times (d) equals (c) times (v) , where either (d) is constant, which is to be decided only once in the comcom's creation, or
 - all owners of the group or of its sub groups are its members, of which number is the same as of group's shares, each member can always return to, and must first become, the group's peer and the number of shares held by one peer is a positive number less than one, which is decided independently only by the group's peers.

Here is a simple example of creating a comcomized network of peers, as the ownership over some trademark of the network is shared/represented-by the peers and an external association functions as a caretaker of the comcom, so that such association could be swapped periodically or in situations of dissatisfaction, while the association arranges personal agreements between the members, such that the newcomer accept the agreement constituting the comcom, the newcomer commits that acceptance to each of the comcom's members by signing on attached list of all those members and each of the comcom's members commits the acceptance of that agreement to the newcomer by being represented by the association.
